The general consensus of this course was that it was very informative but required a lot of work. Students found Yan to be a kind and caring person. There was a little concern about class size and the lack of opportunity for individual students to get attention. Students benefitted from the cultural component of the course, as it allowed them to put the language into a cultural context.

Students found Stowe to be a very enthusiastic lecturer. He genuinely cared about the success of each of his students and helped them in many ways by addressing their questions. He also provided information and guidance of the course, such as essay-writing and mastery of perspective. Although, enthusiastic, some students found that Stowe went off topic during his lectures. Many students benefitted from the tutorials, and some wished that there were tutorials every week rather than every 2 weeks. Evaluation methods were satisfactory, but some students expressed desires for more essay-based evaluations, rather than test-based evaluations.
