Although Fruchtmann was organized and very knowledgeable of the material, he wasn't always successful in conveying the goals of the course. He wasn't available for office hours most of the time due to his court duties. Therefore, students were unable to get help when they needed it.

The assignments weren't given back until two to three months later because the instructor was "too busy performing his Crown Counsel responsibilities". The papers' requirements were unclear and there was insufficient guidance on the material. Some students felt that the readings were quite heavy and challenging.

Duncan was a well-organized instructor. He explained the material in a very clear and interesting manner.

Students felt that they obtained useful knowledge that could be applied to other courses. A few commented that the readings were dense and difficult to understand, but Duncan ensured that adequate examples and clear explanations were provided.
