Most students thought Coupland was well-organized, enthusiastic and very knowledgeable. However, some commented that he tended to stray from the topic at hand, causing the schedule not to be followed or completed. It was also noted that Coupland was sometimes monotonous, making it difficult for some to pay attention.

Students thought that Lehman was enthusiastic, humorous, inspiring and well-organized. However, some commented that he moved too quickly and was unclear about what information was important or relevant for testing.

Overall, students thought the class was good and the material was easy to understand. However, some thought the class size was too large and that more tests and assignments, as well as regular tutorials would have been helpful.

Kalmar was noted for his sense of humour and enthusiasm for the material. A few students felt that the linguistic section was a little too complicated at times.

Jermyn was also thought of as a good instructor, although she spoke too quickly for some students and tended to read her notes.

The class size was just too big with some students talking and playing with their cell phones during lecture time. The marking scheme was condemned by many. There were too few tests (with 75% of the final mark decided in the second semester) and they were all multiple choice. This did not truly reflect students' understanding and knowledge of the material.

Chazan was passionate about the material. However, some felt it unfair to be required to buy the instructor's unfinished textbook for so much money. Chazan also appeared to be disorganized at times. Slides posted beforehand would have been beneficial because it was difficult to follow when he went through them too quickly. The 2 essays that were required in one term required too much work.

Students generally liked Begun calling him very enthusiastic and well-prepared.

Most students disliked the multiple choice questions noting that some questions were designed to confuse students and did not truly reflect the students' knowledge.

One student wrote "I loved this course because you see everyone around you as real primates".

Students felt that the instructor was very enthusiastic, friendly and extremely knowledgeable and used good examples from her own field-work. There were mixed feelings about tutorials, but most felt that they were very helpful for reviewing the material that was covered in class.

The instructor discussed very interesting and exciting topics using informative films in class. Most students seemed to enjoy the topics of globalization and gender issues. Some students felt that the readings for the course were too long, but they were still effective.

Learn Exp	3	0	1	34	36	12	13	4.9

Students found the material interesting and enjoyable, however, some felt the readings were ambiguous and abstract. Most found Kalmar organized and enthusiastic.

There were no outlines, and no expectations were made explicit. The assignments were both due in the second term and were due too close to each other, which the students did not appreciate.

They also felt the tests did not reflect the lecture material, they also did not like that all 3 tests were multiple choice. Aside from the tests and assignments, the students really liked Kalmar and enjoyed the course content.

There was a lack of communication between TAs and the instructor.

Some students felt that there were too many readings for a half-year course. They felt that although it was good that there was no final exam, there should have been assignments and that the essay was worth a lot (50%). The content itself was interesting and the instructor was enthusiastic and passionate about the material.

Barker was overall, a well-liked and effective instructor. Most respondents saw him as knowledgeable, passionate, engaging (in his lecturing and use of media) and proactive in his application to issues in the real world. His use of guest lecturers was beneficial.

Negative aspects of the course included a heavy workload and reading component. The presentation component lacked guidance and applicability for course material. Students thought that this course should have been a full-year due to the amount of material to be studied.

Most students felt that Lee was kind, polite, approachable, knowledgeable and very enthusiastic. Lee was deemed by some to be one of the best instructors at UofT. His experience in the field definitely added a wonderful dimension to his teaching style. While the course was thought provoking and interesting, a few students felt that some lectures were simply regurgitations of the readings. The tests were very fair but some students took issue with the inconsistent marking of the first test. As well, some felt that not enough guidance was given on the essay and that the weighting of 40% was too high. Overall, however, this course was highly recommended.

The majority of students enjoyed the course and found it very informative. The material was challenging and the instructor encouraged critical thinking. The instructor was also approachable, engaging, enthusiastic, and exceptional. However, many students felt that the course could have been better organized (some books were not used and readings were not discussed for the most part). Overall, the topics and ideas discussed were well-liked, and many students found that the Conference of Poverty was an eye opening experience.
