Most students found Barnes approachable and very enthusiastic about the material. However, some students felt that the instructor could have organized his lectures better and that constant deviation from the main topic made it difficult to take notes. Some also felt he assumed too much previous knowledge of the topic and that his lectures were above the introductory level. Some students also would have liked more feedback on written assignments.

Students criticized the evaluation of marks, saying that the distribution was unfair (i.e. 60% exam and only 10% of the marks accounted for before the drop date). Students also found the readings difficult to access as they were available on short term loan. Many students appreciated Cooper's enthusiasm and noted that she performed well considering that it was her first time teaching.

Students enjoyed Akrigg's class, finding the presentation of the material interesting. Students appreciated the detailed handouts that were made available, but recommended that Akrigg post readings more in advance. Many commented on Akrigg's detailed responses to student questions (a few noting that this detracted from the class focus). There was a heavy emphasis on participation, again, with mixed reviews.
