This being a new course, students had several concerns and complaints.

First of all, students found this class disorganized and rushed. It was difficult for students to ask questions in class, because of the time constraints and the fact that Babiak did not seem opened to answering them. Also, despite this being a course for Humanities students, it was very math-based, and students struggled to keep up. Too many smaller assignments were given, and it required more time and effort than the weight they were given. Many students found the guest speakers very interesting, useful, and enjoyable.

Overall, the course requires a lot of improvements. While some thought Babiak was enthusiastic and knowledgeable, a few thought he came off as "unorganized".
